

Beyond Black and White in Medicine Webinar Series

September Discussion Webinar:
Interacting with the Multicultural or Immigrant Patient

Dr. Danielle Ofri, MD, PhD

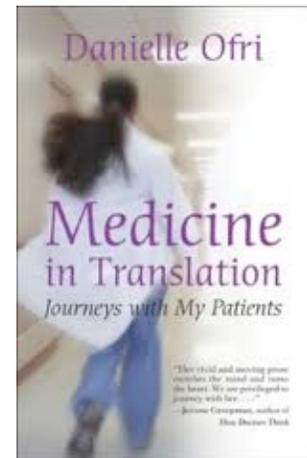

September 15, 2010 at 6pm PT | 7pm MT | 8pm CT | 9pm ET

As the population becomes more culturally diverse, future health professionals in training need to become more informed about and exposed to the health beliefs and practices of people different from their own and to do this in a manner integrated with clinical experiences early on in their training. It is pre-requisite that we not only learn to be culturally sensitive and not stereotype or jump to assumptions about our patients but that we also learn how to really listen and to draw out their personal health stories. In order to practice patient centered care, we need to learn to listen more effectively because the patient is the best source of information about what ails them, negotiate with the patient a treatment plan that both provider and patient can live with, and to learn to ask questions that we may never had thought of asking before the patient granted us entry into the most intimate recess of their person - their health. This discussion webinar will explore how we should approach our multicultural and immigrant patients.

TO REGISTER complete the form by clicking <https://spreadsheets.google.com/viewform?formkey=dFVwd1BPdGpYTGIRY3FkRk9Sb3UwM2c6MQ> by September 8 or send an email to reach.chair@amsa.org with your name, institution/school and location so that we can confirm attendance and assign pre-webinar reading. You may watch and/or listen online, live via your computer and there will be time for a conversation including Q&A. Spaces are limited. Chapters receive priority over individuals.

Danielle Ofri, MD, PhD is Associate Professor of Medicine at New York University School of Medicine but her clinical home is at Bellevue Hospital, the oldest public hospital in the country. She is co-founder and Editor-in-Chief of the Bellevue Literary Review. Her newest book—Medicine in Translation: Journeys with my Patients—is about the experience of immigrants and Americans in the U.S. health care system.

She is the author of two collections of essays about life in medicine: Incidental

Findings: Lessons from my Patients in the Art of Medicine and Singular Intimacies: Becoming a Doctor at Bellevue. She also edited the anthology The Best of the Bellevue Literary Review.

Danielle Ofri's writings have appeared in the New York Times, the Los Angeles Times, the Washington Post, the New England Journal of Medicine, the Lancet, and on CNN.com and National Public Radio. Her essays have been selected by Stephen Jay Gould, Oliver Sacks, and Susan Orlean for Best American Essays (twice) and Best American Science Writing. She is the recipient of the John P. McGovern Award from the American Medical Writers Association for "preeminent contributions to medical communication."

Danielle Ofri is currently working on a set of essays about medicine, while several unfinished novels in various states of disrepair gather prime New-York-City dust under her bed. Ofri lives with her husband, three children, cello, and black-lab mutt in a singularly intimate Manhattan-sized apartment.
