

THE CHALLENGE

Medical students face considerable barriers in education today:

- Changing health care landscape
- Rapid evolution of technology
- Decreased empathy by third year
- Increased drug use and other self-destructive behaviors
- Isolation and minimal support systems
- Expectation of continual growth in the breadth and depth of clinical knowledge
- Mounting debt

AMSA national offers medical schools strategic partnerships designed to address the challenges their students face.

The AMSA Self Awareness Report:

Augments the AMSA Applied Match Preparation Program and provides a launch pad for residency and career development.

- Self-awareness is a critical pre-requisite to becoming an effective healer. The customized AMSA Self Awareness Report provides insight into personality strengths and challenges.
- This insight is invaluable for medical students to move to residency and onto their professional career influencing how they connect to patients, work with colleagues, and advance in their career.
- The AMSA Applied Match Preparation (“AMP”) Program prepares medical students with expert coaches, conducts mock interviews, assists in the development of personal statements, and now includes a unique program that gives applicants the advantage of understanding how they are perceived.
- Medical students engaged in the AMP Program will improve their professionalism and communication skills all to enhance their performance during the Match process.

“Self-awareness at the medical school, graduate medical education, and health system levels is critical based on changes put forth by the AAMC, ACGME, and broadly by the Affordable Care Act,” Dr. Giovanni Piedimonte, President of the Cleveland Clinic Children’s Hospital for Rehabilitation as quoted AMSA’s member magazine The New Physician, Jan.-Feb., 2017.
